

Fact Sheet

U.S. ARMY SUSTAINMENT COMMAND

MISSION

The U.S. Army Sustainment Command is responsible for a wide range of logistics missions in support of current and future combat operations, ongoing Army training cycles, and worldwide humanitarian and disaster relief efforts. ASC has brigades at overseas locations in Germany, Iraq, Korea and Qatar, and in the United States at Fort Bragg, N.C., Fort Hood, Texas, and Fort Lewis, Wash. A network of more than 60 battalions and logistical support elements are dispersed around the globe to support combat commands and geographic areas.

Major ASC responsibilities are:

- Field Support – ASC operates a network of Army field support brigades and battalions, logistics support elements, and brigade logistics support teams which identify and resolve equipment and maintenance problems, as well as materiel readiness issues for combatant commands.
- Materiel Management – ASC matches materiel to mission and assures logistics readiness in the Army Force Generation (ARFORGEN) process. This includes issuing, maintaining and managing Theater-Provided Equipment (TPE) in combat theaters, and Left-Behind Equipment (LBE) that can be made available to non-deployed units for training. ASC reissues fully mission-capable equipment to deployed units upon their return.
- Contingency Contracting – ASC provides combat service support like food and lodging through commercial sources, freeing soldiers for combat missions. The Logistics Civil Augmentation Program (LOGCAP) uses civilian firms to provide a wide range of support services to deployed forces worldwide, while contingency contracting brigades and battalions deploy with expeditionary forces.
- Army Pre-positioned Stocks (APS) – ASC maintains, accounts for and manages combat equipment and supplies, and humanitarian mission stocks, at land- and sea-based positions strategically located around the globe.
